The university and the city

---

Université Libre de Bruxelles (U.L.B.) was created in 1834 in order to defend freedom of teaching, freedom of thought and human dignity. Teaching and research are based on the philosophy of 'free examination'. That principle, which is written in the Statutes of the University, postulates the independence of the individual's judgment and the rejection of dogmatic argument. The fundamental value of 'free examination' remains as the cornerstone of all U.L.B. activities. This constant calling into question is systematically applied to whatever concerns its fundamental missions, however distantly, namely: teaching, research, and service to the community. The U.L.B. includes 7 departments, numerous institutes, schools and research centres. The University's teaching body and researchers include over 2.050 members. Over 18.000 students are enrolled at U.L.B., a third of whom represent 130 foreign countries. The U.L.B. offers several postgraduate programs with links to the field of human rights and democratisation. Notable are the following masters: two masters in international law; two masters within the European Studies Institute, one master in political science; and other transdisciplinary masters. The entire program of these courses is available on the Internet site of the U.L.B. at the following address: <http://www.ulb.ac.be/> For specific information about the Centre of Public Law which hosts the masterini, see <http://www.ulb.ac.be/droit/droitpublic/>

Library

There are 2 libraries available: (Law Library + General Library) as well as online access to many journals.

Contacts with NGOs and/or IGOs

Some members of the Centre are individually involved with NGOs (such as the Belgian League for Human Rights: <http://www.liguedh.be/>). The students will be encouraged to meet with practitioners as well as with researchers of other universities. Brussels is an excellent place for networking with international governmental organisations and around 1.400 international non-governmental organisations on its territory. With 159 embassies and 2.500 diplomats, Brussels is also the second largest diplomatic city in the world. Finally, many interprofessional organisations have chosen Brussels as their home. See: <http://www.bruxelles.irisnet.be/>

Administration and logistics

Information concerning visa arrangements: You should apply for your visa in person at the relevant Belgian embassy or consulate in your country of residence. If there is no Belgian embassy or consulate in your country of residence, you should apply to the Belgian embassy responsible for that country (usually located in a neighbouring country). This embassy will also tell you if you can submit your visa application in your country of residence via the embassy of another Schengen country. For more details see the website: <http://www.diplomatie.be/en/travel/visa/visumDetail.asp?TEXTID=40113>

IT and logistics: The students are hosted at the Centre for Public Law, where a team of professors and doctoral researchers work on various issues in a relaxed atmosphere. The students receive their own office with printer, free access to internet and the library.

!!!! ULB is a French-speaking university. While everything can be handled in English, it eases the administration and the choice of courses if students master (at least some) French.
