The university and the city

Uppsala University was founded in 1477 and is the oldest university in the Nordic countries. The Law School in Uppsala is the oldest in Sweden and has one of Scandinavias most popular educational programs. We are in the lead when it comes to modern legal education and teaching methods, focusing on problem based instruction, critical thinking and learning in small groups. Our model of teaching is based on a foundation of high quality of research carried out at the faculty and extensive international cooperation with other universities. The research at the Faculty has high international prestige and reflects in many ways the changes in society during the later decades, not the least the effect of European law on Swedish law. The Faculty also has extensive cooperation and contact with the surrounding society.
